While the housekeeper will pay a good price for the materials of Thanksgiving dinner this year, yet there is evidence that a kind Providence is tempering the winds of financial adversity to the shorn lamb. Fowl, meats, fish, fruits, and vegetables are in great supply in Washington this year, and prices are lower than they have been at many other times as the Thanksgiving festivities approached.

For several days past in almost all grades of provisions the wholesale market has been somewhat overstocked, and, except on the best grades, the retail dealers have been able to buy this year below "top prices." Undoubtedly, the customer will have the advantage of this slightly lower price for provision, and when the family gathers about the board to-morrow there will be this additional item for Thanksgiving.

Yesterday and last night grocers and stall-keepers in the markets were working late getting their stock in shape, and this morning the stores in the residence section of the city and the markets will be at their best. The wise housekeeper will be out early to get good bargains and give the groceryman time to send home the parcels. It will be a great bargain day in Washington, and until late hours to-night the retail dealer will labor as he does only twice each year, namely on the days before Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Turkeys Good and Cheap.

Thanks to the thrifty farmer, the turkey this year is at a moderate price. The past summer seemed to be an ideal one for the young chicks, and the mother birds all over Virginia, Maryland, and the near-by States raised big broods. As the season advanced the birds flourished, and now at the turkey harvest, so to speak, they are in prime condition, plentiful, and comparatively cheap. It was stated yesterday by close observers of market conditions in Washington, that the national Thanksgiving bird would cost less this year than at any time for nearly a decade.

The same thing holds good with other fowl. The market is well supplied, and the family which prefers chicken-pie will be supplied at a moderate price, compared with the general high price of provisions.

Cranberries a Little High.

The cranberry this year is a little scarce and high, but enough will be saved on the turkey to more than make up for the attendant dish. Celery is also expensive, and a little poor in quality, conditions not having been so favorable as usual for growing and preparing the crop. Yet celery is to be had at 5 cents the bunch, if the housekeeper is not too discriminating as to the size and whiteness of the stalks. Otherwise she will be called upon to pay 10 cents.

Apples are cheap, oranges cost no more than usual, and nuts are in fine quality and at the average price in other years. The pumpkin is also in evidence, yellow, large, and in ideal condition for the final course of dinner. The warm days of autumn were what the pumpkin needed for its proper ripening, and the stalls in market carry some of the best specimens of this citron, with its cousin, the squash, that have been seen in Washington in several years.

Vegetables in Good Supply.

The vegetable market, except sweet potatoes, is well stocked at moderate prices. White potatoes and onions are particularly plentiful this year, and the potato is of far better quality than usual. The best grade can be had at $1 a bushel, with slightly inferior stock shading down to about 75 cents.

Fish and oysters are in fair condition, and not at high prices, as compared with other seasons of this year. If one goes into the Lynn Haven or some other far-off brand, the price will be high, but good oysters are to be had from 30 to 50 cents a quart, shucked.

All in all, Washington will be well fed to-morrow, and at a cost well within the means of the average family. The poor, of course, will be remembered, as usual, for Washington is nothing if not charitable.
